JING

Okay, I admit it. Sometimes I am guilty of using something so often and it is so easy that I don't consider it a technology and I don't even think about sharing it. Jing is one of those tools. Jing is from the TechSmith family, which offers SnagIt and Camtasia. Jing has been on my computer for about 8 years now and I use it every week, especially when I create training materials.

First of all, Jing is FREE! Jing is always active on your computer and is a quick and easy way to capture items on your screen or make a short screencast. Jing is a little sun that hangs out on the edge of your screen.

It is easy because there are only a few features and the screencasts cannot be any longer than 5 minutes. Your captures can be saved on your computer, copied and pasted, output to social media, or uploaded and saved in screencast.com (where links are produced for sharing)

This link brings you to the Jing download. Check out the tutorials on Jing at the bottom of the webpage and you will see how easy it is to use. You'll see why Jing has played such a large role in my work life. Enjoy.
